Background to the Second Stakeholder Consultation Round

The first consultation round with stakeholders, held in Brussels on 27 March 2014, revealed a possibility for a new approach to pursuing the strategic aims of EGF's current research on the Karabakh context. The Brussels consultation round alluded to the creation of a platform for exchange of information between Armenian and Azerbaijani experts on energy, transport, trade issues, the rehabilitation of the territories affected by the conflict and the return of IDPs to their homeland. Such exchanges could lead to development of post-conflict scenarios, based on a roadmap leading towards an economically integrated South Caucasus, underpinned by a number of very broad and uncontroversial principles. These include the right of all people to live in an environment of peace and security; a shift in government strategy from preparing for war to building enduring peace and fostering economic development; good neighborly relations as a basis for peace building; the right of all people to strive for economic prosperity; and the right of all IDPs and refugees to return to their homes and/or lands and live there in peace and security.

Session I: Post-conflict regional cooperation in the South Caucasus: A strategic plan for regional development?

Our ongoing research suggests that economic drivers are unlikely to be a panacea for conflict resolution in the Nagorno-Karabakh (NK) context. However, it likewise shows that expert discussion on economic issues may be highly useful in ‘preparing the ground’ for some level of flexibility in the current rigidity which grips the parties regarding NK. Starting a public debate amongst NK stakeholders on the advantages/disadvantages of choosing peace and regional economic development over the current state of hostility may ease some of the tension in the NK context. This view appears to be broadly supported within international peace building circles relevant to NK. The aim of this session is to explore, together, the scope of a “strategic plan for regional development”, or a “blueprint for economic development in the South Caucasus” as a key trigger for such a public debate. Could ‘elements of cooperation’ lead to

Session II: Considerations of business and investment: reintegrating post-conflict Karabakh within the regional South Caucasus economic framework

Our research has highlighted that business people in both Armenia and Azerbaijan do not consider cooperation with one another as a viable option at the present time. However, the need to involve the business community in the discussion on post-conflict regional economic scenarios was a recurring message from the Brussels consultation round. Some voices from the region call for Karabakh to become the modern day Alsace-Lorraine of the South Caucasus, implied to mean a thriving zone of regional significance, where important historical cultures intersect and economies thrive. Others, in the same spirit, call on the region to become a “free economic space”, where abundant investment from Azerbaijan will one day be welcome. At the purely commercial level, such investment may eventually come in the form of joint projects between Armenians, their Azerbaijani neighbours, as well as international partners, replacing the many missed opportunities forced on the region as a result of conflict and tension.

The aim of this session is to examine the role that business could play in the regional economic development in a post-conflict scenario in the NK context. Would Armenian and Azerbaijani businesses be willing to invest in this region of the Caucasus? Could region-wide investment projects ‘sweep up’ NK as part of a future regional economic boom? Are we too fixated on security questions relating to Karabakh and missing immense opportunity by seemingly ignoring scope for economic cooperation? Could Armenians and Azerbaijanis, possibly from Diaspora communities, as well as Turkish, Russian and other investors see incentives in the development of joint commercial projects in the region? Can we work together towards a blueprint for regional economic development, at least in the form of a strategic policy documents for decision makers and foreign investors? What is the opinion of business leaders about the overall ‘prospects for NK’, were an appropriate political climate to emerge?

Session III: Post-conflict scenario building workshop and group simulation

The aim of this workshop is to simulate a negotiation process in order to reflect a possible real life situation which may occur in the NK context at a future date, and to draw lessons learned during a feedback session.

Scenario

In April 2019 a peace agreement based on the (current) Madrid Principles has been reached between the Republics of Salandia and Oronia. In May 2019, the presidents of Salandia and Oronia, working under the auspices of the Minsk Group, have established a bi-national Task Force mandated with drawing up a road-map for implementation of the economic considerations of the Peace Agreement. The Task Force is charged with agreeing upon projects, timetables, and other contentious issues for implementation of these economic priorities. Furthermore, the Task Force is invited to propose additional economic projects that can act as confidence building measures by addressing the restoration of war-torn energy, transport and socio-economic infrastructure in NK and the territories around it by establishing, where possible, ‘economic projects of common interest’.

THE EUROPEAN GEOPOLITICAL FORUM

Participants' goals

Your task will be to simulate negotiations of the above mentioned Task Force. You will need to employ your respective areas of expertise in order to creatively negotiate within the above scenario that a Peace Agreement over NK has been reached and that a road map for its implementation is now high priority. Your objective is to 'thrash out' negotiations on economic considerations of the road map to ensure its smooth and timely implementation, taking into account the interests of your countries and the key components of the Peace Agreement. The end goal is to agree upon an "official" Road Map document which can be supported by both parties. You will also be asked to make press statements during a mock press conference. More detailed instructions will be provided in due course.

13.00 – 14.30

Working lunch and networking opportunities

15.00

End of the consultation round and workshop, departure of participants

NOTE: Discussion openers: initial interventions/presentations should be around 15 minutes in length each. Initial responses should be around 10 minutes each. These interventions will be followed by open discussion inclusive of all/any participants in the roundtable. We envisage participation of around 25-30 persons. The event is intended for expert level participants. Any diplomats present may participate in the sessions only in the capacity of 'observers'. All discussions will take place under the Chatham House Rule (ie., no media citations) and conducted in the 'gentlemanly spirit of honest exchange of ideas'. Any rash statements intended as political messages will be disqualified from the discussion.

About Us

ITIC spreads knowledge of taxation and investment to nations around the world and serves as a neutral forum for discussion and resolution of problems in tax and investment policy – a place where governments can go for technically sound, objective, field-tested advice. ITIC builds bridges from the West to the East and from the private to the public sector. We help nations with statutory language and accounting expertise, but also with a more important objective: adopting policies that encourage the formation of legal, taxpaying businesses. Through the four regional tax forums, «hands-on» working sessions, and special relationships with tax officials, lawmakers, academic experts, industry experts and professionals, ITIC brings together stakeholders in the tax systems of its focus countries to address a range of issues and problems.
